The mystery of the number 7 has been discussed throughout history. The number 7 is not divisible by itself and any other number. It is a prime number. There are 7 days of the week. There are 7 planets. There are 7 continents in the world. According to the Jews, God created the world in 6 days and took a vacation on the 7th. But according to the same belief, he created the donkey before man. There are 7 notes in music. There are 7 basic colors in the picture. In Islam, there are 7 levels representing the maturation of human beings. There are 7 Buddha gods in Tibet. Fatiha, the first surah of the Qur'an, has 7 verses. There are 7 colors in the rainbow. There are 7 perforated points on the human face. There are 7 letters in the Roman numeral system. There are 7 hills in Istanbul, Rome and Jerusalem. The Jewish candelabra has 7 candles. According to the Indians, there are 7 seasons. And we can count many more 7 things.

So how many dimensions are there in the world?

I explained this as 5 in my last post. However, considering that Freud defined the subconscious in 3 dimensions, there are only two dimensions left, and I will tell you about them in this article.

5th dimension ego

Ego is a set of mental functions that enable human beings to live in harmony with the outside world. It is the organizing, balancing and adapting component of personality.

6th dimension superego

Over time, a part of the ego evolves in relation to socialization and values, forming the superego layer. The superego introduces the concept of morality to the impulses sent by the id, and accordingly, it covers up by delaying or ignoring requests that would be deemed inappropriate.

And the 7th dimension Id Id

The etymology of the Latin word id is based on the work "Das Buch vom Es" written by Georg Groddeck, one of the pioneers of early psychosomatic medicine. In the Latin language, the word "id" is used as a neutral third person pronoun.

The id represents the mind's most primitive need drives. The sexual and aggressive impulses that occur in human psychology are shaped around the id; It is the basis of our desires such as hunger, sexuality and excretion. According to Freud, a newborn baby consists of the pure id, seeking immediate satisfaction of physiological needs. Imagine a baby crying until he's bruised because he's hungry, he doesn't know what it is; but it needs food and wants it to happen immediately.

The issue that needs to be emphasized here is that the biggest reason why it is said that human behavior is a tool that puts pressure on others today, and that his behavior cannot be understood by others (his attitudes changed when he took office, we did not recognize him as such) is that he feels that he has reached the environment where he will satisfy the uneasiness brought by his childhood trauma with his office by persecuting others. For this reason, he does not hesitate to exhibit the position he has achieved, especially to his gifted colleagues and candidate candidates. These people do not act within the idea of society. Ignoring their actions by their peers causes them to engage in more dangerous behaviors.

Shhhh... Let no one hear...
